Arr Teist is an aspiring artist who specialized in abstract and obscure art. He has always enjoyed painting and the idea of creating something new.

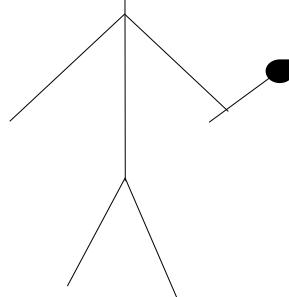

However, despite his immense passion for art, he is often ridiculed by the community. Many find his art to be strange or uninspired and refuse to purchase it. This causes Arr Teist to become depressed. As a result, he makes less and less art and makes very little money.

He heard news of an artist near him who was very well off, but never sold any of his paintings to the community. When Arr Teist asked this man where all his paintings were going the artist said, "across the globe". To Arr Tesits surprise, many other communities were more interested in the abstract art that this artist made.

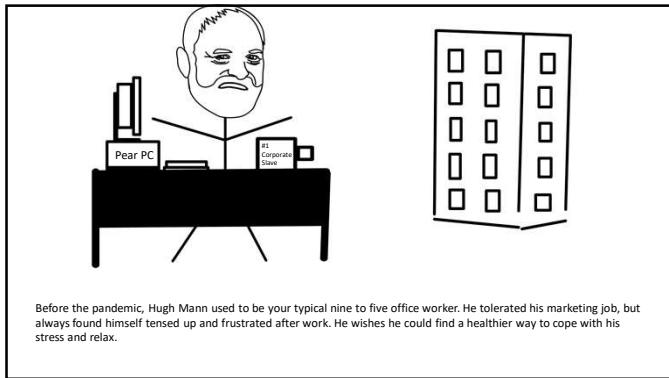

When Arr Teist asked how he was showing his art to other countries, the artist showed him the app Inspire.me. Through this application, the artist was able to create an account displaying his art to other art communities. Whenever someone was interested in his art, the app would notify the artist and they would discuss a price.

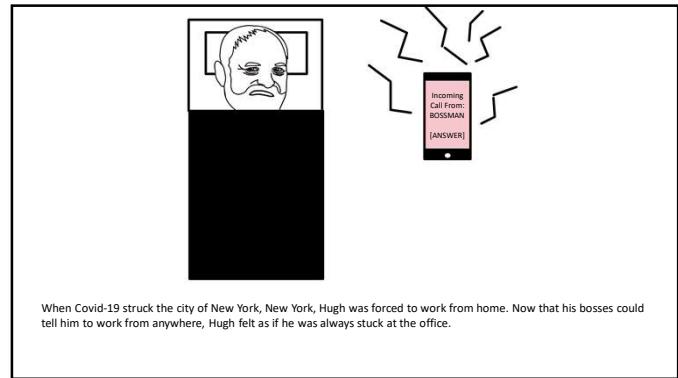

Arr Teist was fascinated by this and decided to create his own account. Within a week, he was selling his art to people in other states and countries.

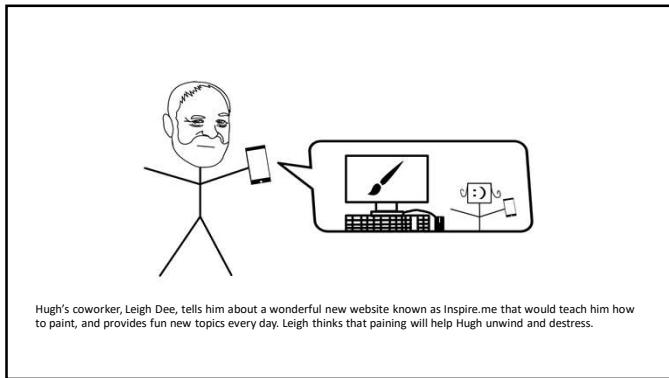

Arr Teist continued to grow his influence year by year, eventually becoming a pivotal figure in the larger abstract art community.

Before the pandemic, Hugh Mann used to be your typical nine to five office worker. He tolerated his marketing job, but always found himself tensed up and frustrated after work. He wishes he could find a healthier way to cope with his stress and relax.

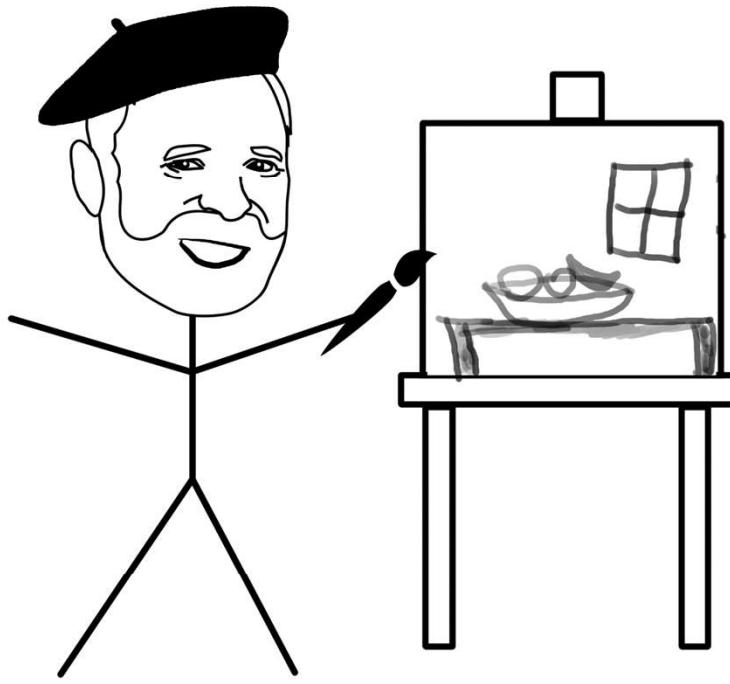

When Covid-19 struck the city of New York, New York, Hugh was forced to work from home. Now that his bosses could tell him to work from anywhere, Hugh felt as if he was always stuck at the office.

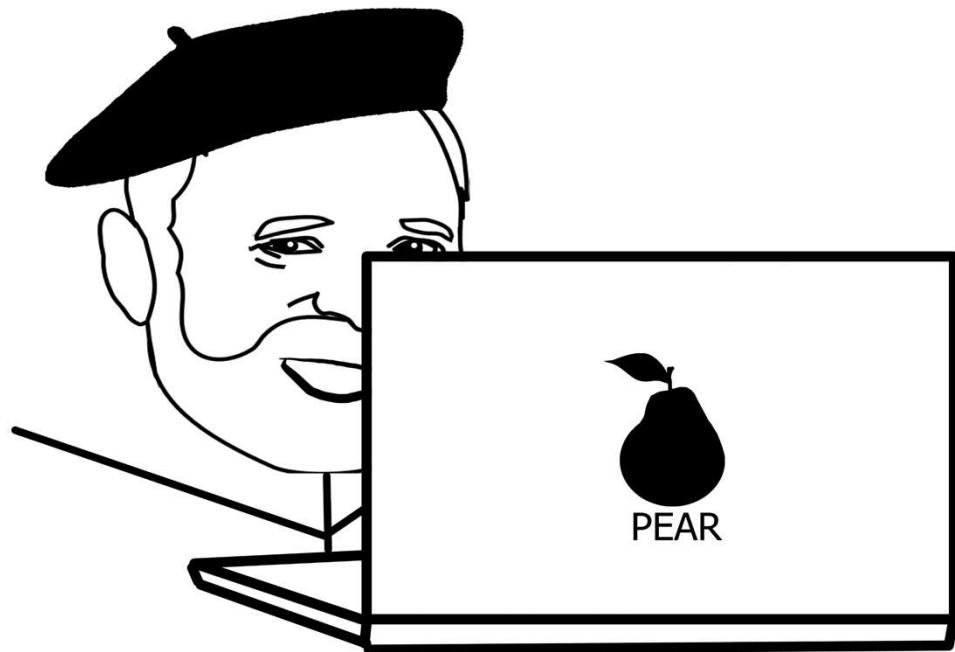

Hugh's coworker, Leigh Dee, tells him about a wonderful new website known as Inspire.me that would teach him how to paint, and provides fun new topics every day. Leigh thinks that painting will help Hugh unwind and destress.

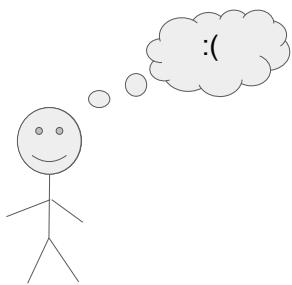

Hugh orders some painting supplies off Amazoo.net and starts learning by doing some paint along tutorials. He sets aside at least an hour a day to do nothing but paint.

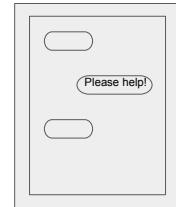

As he starts to get the hang of painting, he finds himself getting in the zone, and not worrying about work or Covid-19. He feels like his skills as an artist, and his mood are improving. Hugh begins moving on to the daily painting challenges.

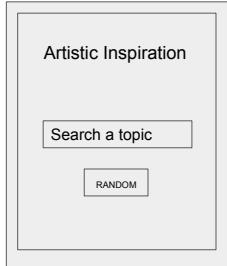

After having painted with Inspire.me for a few months, Hugh feels confident enough to post his work on the website so others can comment and take inspiration from his work. He finds that Inspire.me's relaxing painting tutorials have helped him unwind and express himself like never before.

Juan Pablo has been struggling to keep his Spanish grade up. The teacher has offered an extra credit assignment that involves drawing something from a latin country. Unfortunately, Juan Pablo has little to none artistic abilities and is stressed about the assignment.

Juan Pablo reaches out to a fellow classmate who then tells him about a new application that can generate images that will help him figure out what to draw.

Luckily, the application lets the user search general topics which would allow Juan Pablo to get images containing a Latin American country.

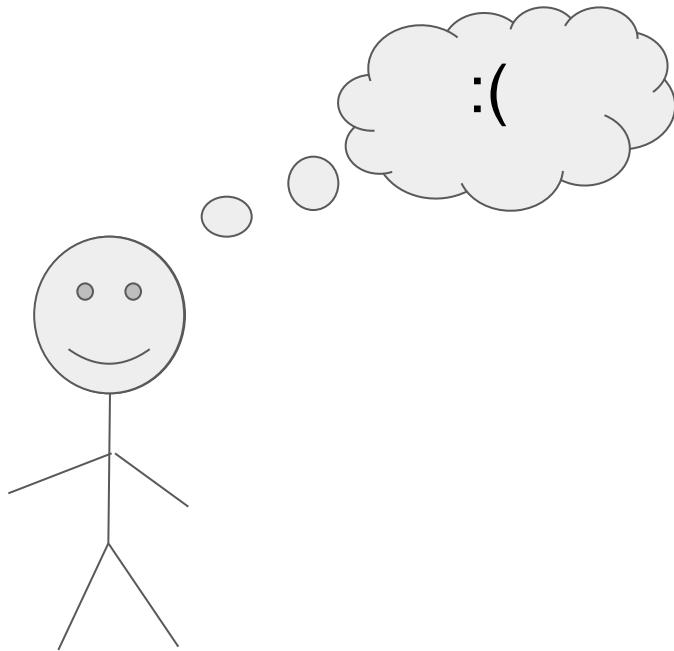

Juan Pablo is studying abroad in Santiago, Chile during his senior year. Therefore, he thought it would be appropriate to generate images about Chile.

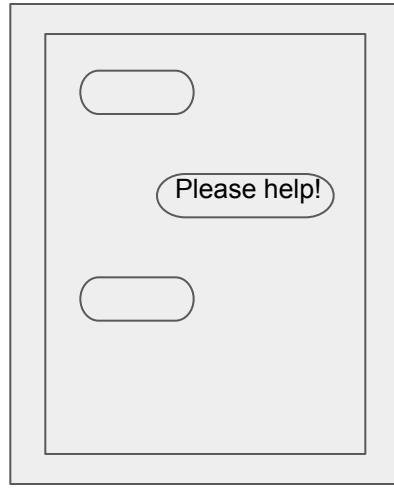

Juan Pablo was left speechless by the beautiful photographs that application was able to gather for him. He felt so inspired and motivated to draw his extra credit assignment.

Juan Pablo received full credit on his assignment and felt so satisfied with the app that he rated the application 5 stars on the apple store.
